

Caryl Technologies Launches New Service for Caregivers

The Buddy Check Network Offers Peace of Mind

Bryn Mawr, PA-- Demographics reveal that the population of the United States is aging. With the first baby boomers turning 65 in 2011, by the year 2030, almost one out of five Americans - some 72 million people - will be 65 years or older.

While these statistics are alarming, what really hits home about these numbers is the population of caregivers who will be impacted by the daily demands of their role. In addition, a considerable segment of the elderly population will strive to maintain their independence and privacy without feeling isolated.

Caryl Technologies, LLC believes that living alone doesn't have to translate into feelings of isolation. The innovative technology company recently launched its Buddy Check Network. "My Buddy Check" voice service monitors the elderly daily and provides extra support and peace of mind for family and friends serving as caregivers.

Utilizing speech recognition technology, this user-friendly system automatically monitors loved ones or "buddies"- by calling them at scheduled times each day to determine if they need help or are in distress. The system immediately sends alerts, via voice mail, text message or email to the family if the individual needs help or did not answer the phone when expected.

The appeal of the system is its ease of use and affordability. At less than a dollar a day, independence and peace of mind is only a simple phone call away with the Buddy Check Network.

Based in Bryn Mawr, Caryl Technologies is an innovative web 2.0 company that integrates speech and internet technology with any mobile or standard telephone. www.caryltech.com
